Chili could just jump on a little, unarmed band of American saliors, on shore to avoid scurvy, and "astonish" them with her military prowess. But when it came to the American nation, the just the slow to anger, but terrible when aroused, UNCLE SAM was there and there was no question but what he "was in it." It is worth something, after all, to be an AMERICAN CITIZEN. It means a GOOD DEAL. The same is true of Dr. Fenner's Kidney and Backache Cure. It means everything, when it is known and used by those who are in need. If you are bowed down with kidney disease, female weakness, or blood impurities, together with their results of backache, haggard looks, skin eruptions, scrofula, dyspepsia, constipation, the blues, weariness, headaches, erysipelas, salt rheum, or any kindred affection, as well as heart disease, rheumatism, dropsy, etc. its use means a restoration to health, an elastic step, florid cheeks, strength and happiness. In short it means being "on deek" again. If you are in need take a bottle home to-day. If satisfaction not given money refunded.

MY FRIEND'S WIFE.

After all I am going to marry Lucile It is more than a year since poor Robethon died, and—perhaps I am a donkey to do it at my time of life, but she is unquestionably a charming woman. She made him happy, and—I am afraid I am a fool. I feel, however, as though I owed it almost to his memory, and something to her too. Yes, there is no doubt I owe her something in that line—and yet, good heavens, I am not doing it on that account. I love her desperately. down to the ground.

"Dick," she said to me yesterday, looking straight at me with her wonderful blue eyes—"Dick, why do you ask me—

"Better late than never," I answered.

She began, "Five, six years ago you"—and stopped.
"I know. I was a fool, Lucille. I never once thought of it though. You see, the idea was foreign to me. I never intended to marry." "And now?"

"With your kind assistance I do in-"Why?"

Her question almost bowled me over. I gazed at the carpet, wondering how I could best put it to her. Presently I looked up, and as our eyes met I blurted out, "Because I love you, of course." I did not mean to say that just then. The truth is that the idea of "reparation" had got sole possession of my brain, and how to express it graveled me.

Lucile laughed lightly. "That, Dick, is a second thought, and not a bad one for a man who is offering himself as a husband. Still. I want your first. "I was thinking that, love apart, you have a moral claim upon me."

A great wave of color rose and fell. leaving her beautiful face pale as marble. "A claim-really? A moral claim? Why moral? Why not material? When I turn huckster, Dick, I will traffic only

I saw what she meant. Love's gifts. being no impoverishment of love, entail no indebtedness upon the recipient. Love is paid for its gift in the giving. This, I thought, was a counsel of perfection and better suited to angels and angelic loves than to men and women in an earthly, highly conventional and British "And that is why you wish to marry me?" she added. I felt that I was on thin ice. "No. darling, it is not. I love you. There's no harm in that, I hope?" "No, not a bit. It is a very good reason. Genuine, Dick?" "Quite, on my honor."

"The honor of an English general-

more, of an English gentlemsn-more still, of a well tried friend-that is good enough for me. Here's my hand on it,

That was only yesterday. It seems 20 years ago. Poor Robethon-he knew little. I do not think I was to blame. I acted loyally enough by him. It was like this, you see. Robethon and I were pretty close friends. I spent much of my time at my clubs, and at one or other of them I was always coming across Robethon. The taste for chess was mutual and was the ground of our first acquamtarce. We were about th age heading fast for to. He was short and stout; I was long and lean.

I had been all over the world, while he had never been outside of England. Sometimes I fancied he had never been outside of London. If he had, he was careful to conceal the fact. We were both bachelors. His chambers were close-to St. James street, mine to Piccadilly. We never visited each other though. He was partner in a well known firm of bankers, but had not entered their place of business for 20 years. He had read a world beyond me and was a gentle, sym-

I wish I could say as much truthfully of myself; no false modesty should keep me from writing it down. Still Robethon cared for me, and I am deuced sure I cared for him. His reticence was characteristic of the man; it was like a suit of steel armor covering him from head to foot. Sometimes I think it was, fundamentally, shyness—not of the ordi-nary kind, of which there was not a trace about him, but deep spiritual shyness. On the other hand, it might have been due to an austere selectness of spirit, sensitive, delicate pride of soul. The clubmen held him in great esteem, in a manner were proud of him, considered him an authority on disputed points of honor and the like and accepted his judgment with doc lity and reverence.

One day I met a lady on Pall Mall—tall, fair, straight as a dart and with a face that rell on me like a vision. I turned and watched her, and while so doing she suddenly halt ed, turned around and came toward me. I stood still. In passing she gave me a momentary glance. Ha, she was very lovely! A month or six weeks later there was a reception at a certain floreign embassy, and I happened to be present. It was not my kind of thing at all, but I chanced to be an old acquaintance of the embassador in question. There was a big crowd, and dancing was in full swing. Passing by the ballroom, I stood for a moment to watch the dancers. The first thing I saw was the lady of Pall Mall, oriously arrayed, waltzing with a Ger-

"Who is she?" I asked a man I knew. "Which one? Oh, that divine symphony of color there, eh? That is Mrs. Trenchard."

"And who is Mrs. 'Trenchard?"

"He shook his head. "Che's a widow; that's all I know. She is in the swim wonder you haven't met her before. I have, half a dozen times; but I live up to my principles, of which the first is, Thou shalt not do—anything in this widow line."

I left him grinning. I could have kicked him without any remorse. From another man I gleaned that Trenchard had been in the Indian political service and had died suddenly. In certain lines men are dolts and women creatures of genius. A woman there, a dear old downger, told me in five minutes all I wanted to know. Her people were all dead, she was a lady of birth and breeding, she had none too much money, she was very popular and very correct, and—would I like an introduction? Five minutes later I made my first bow to the divine symphony. She was gloriously generous, gave herself to me for 10 whole minutes, and when I withdrew she murmured, with a graciousness that seemed regal, "Perhaps we shall meet again." We did meet, again and again, Our acquaintance ripened into friendshipand finally into very close intimacy. I saw her at least once every week. This went on for three or four years. Between me and Robethon she was a forbidden subject. I knew it would only pain him. For the same reason I never once mentioned Robethon's name to her.

It was December. Robethon and I, as usual, were lunching at the same table.
All at once he said, "I am married."
"Married! God forbid!"

"I have been married a month." "In that case it would be brutal not to wish you joy."

"With all the pleasure in the world.

But it is like a dream."

He laughed like a man on the right side of the hedge as he said: "Yes, it's like a dream-a beautiful dream. Come as early as you can."

I think I felt a trifle hurt that such a revolution in his domestic economy should have occurred without his informing me of it, but I was none the less curious to see the woman who made so notable a capture. In these days it is the men and not the women who are captured. I was very punctual. The rest of the folks were of course late. Robethon met me in the coatroom. "Bagot," he said, "this is very good of you. I've been thinking I ought to have told you sooner, but—I'll tell you how it happened and all about it at the Egyptian Cats Fond of the Water. By some persons the popularity of the cat in Egypt has been attributed to the fact that the animal was valuable in ridding the palaces of rats and mice and also in hunting fowl. There are several paintings in the British museum, exe cuted by ancient Egyptian artists, representing Egyptian sportsmen in boats on the river Nile, accompanied by large cats, sitting on their haunches in the stern. Other pictures show the cats swimming with birds in their mouths after the manner of retriever dogs. These pictures 'save greatly perplexed modern naturalists because the cat of today has a strong aversion to water, and it is difficult to reconcile such different traits even after the lapse of thousands o years.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

MEDITATIONS. THY DAISY DEAN

Last night when the fire burned low And I was sitting all alone— Meditating o'er the past And thinking o'mychildhood home

Sweet memories carried me back
To the home where I was born,
To the home, the sweet happy home, In childhood's early morn

When I was free from every care And knew not sorrow's bitter pang. When I was loving good and true, And knew not false was man. thought all men were kind and true

And women as good as fair, did not dream that they were false I could not believe they were. But ah, 'tis past and I have learne!

The bitter lesson all must know,
That men are false, and woman too—
It seems that God has made them so.

But why should they be false to me When I to them have been so true? Ah, false, fair woman, why is this -And why are men so fickle too?

Could I but solve the problem, That I now meditate upon: would be forever satisfied And think my work well done.

But it will remain a mystery, Until we gather around the throne And there be judged by Him,
For all the deeds that we have done.

She was alone. I saw a vision Cleveland's wishes, notwithstanding the almost continual presence of his 93, for the month ending September personal representative, Secretary Carlisle, at the Capitol. By the way many consider that Secretary Carlisle's action in this matter has been violation of good taste; it looks as Robethon and tell him in an aside that though he was there to prevent the Administration Senators going estray. The Senators are very, very tired and the end of the business is not far off.

It costs a lot of money to keep detective hanging around the homes of pensioned veterans, in search of some excuse to deprive the pensioner of all or a portion of his allowance. In the regular pension appropriation bill for the current fiscal year there was an item of $200,000 for the investigation of pension cases; that is, to pay expenses incurred outside of the regular machinery of the Pension Bureau. Although only a little more than one-fourth of the fiscal year has gone, all of that $200,000 appropriation has been expended and Secretary Hoke Smith has asked Congress for an additional appropriation of $300,000 to be used for the same purpose. Although the elections are more than a year off the Republican Congressional campaign committee has been organized for business and will at once open headquarters in Washington and begin the work that is expected to result in giving the Republicans control of the next House. The following experienced campaigners will run the machine: Chairman, Hon. J. A. Caldwell, of Ohio; Vice-chairman, Hon. J. W. Babcock, of Wis; Secretary, Hon. S. S. Olds, of Mich.; Assistant Secretary, Col. T. H. McKee, of Ind. An executive committee composed of the following Senators and Representatives, in addition to the Chairman and Secretary who are ex-officio members, will be in immediate charge Representatives Draper, of Mass. THE next Legislature should pass a road law providing some simple plan to have the roads worked by taxation. The people lose more money from bad roads year by year than for testimonials free.

The present F. J. CHEENEY an imposition and a beavy tax on the price, 75c. people but is a failure.

Almost a year has passed since the election of Grover Cleveland on the direct pledge for the repeal of the "iniquitous McKinley Bill," and although we have had a Democratic Administration for a period of eight months, the people are still being "robbed" by the Tariff. Shame on the Democratic Planting of the dear people long ago.

THE schools of the county are in a very prosperous condition. Attendance is very good, work of the teachers excellent, and a better co operation on the part of patrons than ever known before. The new law in reference to the turniture plays no doubt a very important part. When you touch a man on the pocket-book you When you at once gain his attention.

PAPERS of all parties denounce the last Legislature as being the worst ever inflicted upon the State. It was overwhelmingly Democratic, and the people have no assurance if another Democratic Legislature is chosen that it will be better than the last. What Kentucky needs is a Republican Administration and as the next best thing for this year let us have a Republican Legislature. Vote for Awtry and Taylor.

Is there an intelligent Democrat in the county who is proud of the record of his party in Congress? No, not one. The Cleveland Administration so far is a very costly experimental farce—a miserable failure, marked by panic, bankruptcy and selves whether you are guarding your rest upon the efforts for good. own and your family's interest in voting the Democratic ticket, when the party fails to administer successfully the affairs of either the State or the man who bought his place with $50 .- | the columns of the newspapers every Allen gave to the Democratic campaign fund in 1892 the above sum with the express understanding it seems that he should receive the Italian Mission. In spite of the fact that this became known, Cleveland ap-pointed Van Allen, who is acknowledged by Democratic papers to have no fitness for the position, and a Democratic Senate confirms his appointment. Such is Democracy.

THE Democratic party is rapidly convincing the people that it is unable to administer successfully the affairs of the National Government and the administration of affairs in Kentucky has already convinced the people of the State that the party as a ruling party is a failure. The only vote in which Democracy has been successful to any great extent has been as a party of opposition. It knows perfectly well how to oppose and to obstruct but is merely a voice in proposing and carrying into effect.

EVERY Republican Club in the county should be re-organized at once and set to work. With the Democratic record in Kentucky for extravagance and mismanagement and the failure of the Democratic National Administration in all it undertakes, there is no reason why the Republicans should not carry the county by a handsome majority. Every Republican can point with pride to the record of his party, but not so with our opponents. They can but feel the reverse when contemplating theirs. These things have weight and proper organization will give us the victory. Re-organize the clubs. They are the campaign.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1893.

A very unfortunate affair occurred at Fordsville last week. Prof. S. W. Pate, teacher of the Intermediate Department of the Fordville school corrected a small boy, a very rude little fellow, as we learn, whereupon the boy became very boistrous and the Prof. gave him a sound threshing. The matter was brought up before the Police Judge Saturday and the teacher was fined $7.50. The people are almost unanimous in condemning the action of the court and sustaining the teacher. They made up the entire fine. Aside from this little affair the school is a very successful one.

THE RED RIBBON.

Uncle Fred was simply a very nice fellow whose name was Frederick Barrois. He was of a good disposition. That could be read on his youthful face, such a youthful face that on seeing the narrow red ribbon in his buttonhole people sometimes asked him for his story. And he, to avoid the embarrassment felt in speaking of one's self, answered somewhat maliciously:

"I was born 26 years ago, and since then-nothing ever happened to me." But it was not so. It happened to him that he had bravely won this red ribbon which showed so advantageously upon his breast. Having been sent to Tonquin as a cavalry officer, he had freed a bat-tery of artillery which the enemies already believed in their possession.

Unfortunately it also happened to him during the fight that he had received a bullet in the side.

As he had been too recently appointed lieutenant to be promoted to the rank of captain, he received instead the cross of e Legion of Honor, and this greatly helped to heal his wound. Still, however well healed it might have been, he remained very weak. He was sent home to become stronger.

And this is how, for the last fortnight, he had been living in clover at the home of his sister, Mme. Julia Duchemin, whose husband owned a glass works at Boves, near Amiens.

Frederick was happy there, for he loved his sister, and his sister loved him. There was but one drawback to his happiness. His brother-in-law, Jacques Duchemin, had been obliged to leave on the day following the young officer's ar-

As a compensation there was between the brother and the sister the latter's daughter, a girl just over 5 years of age, who appeared delighted with Uncle Fred and with the gold lace of his uniform, and for whose benefit Frederick became a boy again. All the acquaintances they had-but with whom they sustained almost constant intercourse—were Mme. Bourgeois, a widow, and her daughter Antoinette, a young girl of 18.

How pretty she was! Not so much in regularity of feature, but in her simplicity, her natural grace, her personal

As for Mme. Bourgeois, she was kindness itself, but a jovial, indulgent, sensible, smiling kindness.

Mother and daughter were a charming That is what our young man had as certained at once, to his no small satisction. He found an attraction he had never before experienced in meeting these ladies. Were they late in coming Time seemed heavy to him. And if his sister advised him to go for them off he went at once. It was not far, it is true. Three hundred yards from the glass works. They lived in a large villa, surrounded by a fine park, which belonged to the young girl in her own right, without counting other property which it was rumored amounted to over a million.

But Frederick did not care for that. It was the young girl's character which

One morning after breakfast Freder ick was smoking a cigar in the garden by his sister's side, in whose skirts the little Martha was diligently curling her doll's wig.

At the table they had spoken of Antoinette, and now-now they still spoke of her. Then after a moment of silence Frederick said, with a sigh:

"What a pity she is so rich!" "Why?" asked Julia, looking steadily at her brother, with eyes full of anxiety "To woo a young girl you know to be a millionaire, when besides your salary you scarcely have $3,000 a year, would not be acting like a gentleman.'

To her brother's surprise, Julia did not answer. She had turned her head aside. He put his hand on her shoulder, with a heavy heart, exclaiming: "You are crying! What is the matter drowned in tears. The young man kneeled before her, and putting his arms around her said: "Julia! Julia! I have but you in the world. You have some sorrow. Oh, I beg of you do not hille it from me! Sister, dear little sister! You have no right to conceal it from me." She hesitated for a moment; then in low voice, in accents choked with sobs, she whispered her confidence. It was simple and short. A bank suspended payment. Through this they would lose a large amount. That is why Duchemin was traveling. Alas, his letters announced nothing good But in the meantime what is the con nection between this disaster and Frederick's love for Antoinette? Ah, yes, yes! Becoming rich through his wife, the lieutenant would have come to his brother-in-law's rescue.

Julia, moved to tears, was saying: "And then Jacques is so kind, so diligent, so honest! If you only knew, Fred, how he loves your sister and what happiness she owes him! Ah, ruin, privations-that is nothing! The hard part is that a man like Jacques should bear the undeserved stain of a kind of disgrace. Will it ever be granted to me to console

In his turn the young man kept quiet, lowering his eyes, thinking of this marriage which might have saved his rela-

But while lowering his eyes he saw his red ribbon, and it seemed to him he heard an interior voice repeating the sentence he had just uttered, "It would not be acting like a gentleman. He also saw that Martha no longer curled her doll's wig. Sitting on the ground motionless and silent, the child was looking at her mother, who wept silently. She wept-in silence also. "Julia," said the young man soberly,

"go, in my name, to ask for Mlle. Bour-

"At last!" triumphantly exclaimed Antoinette's mother after Julia had formulated her request. Then calling her daughter she added in the same joyful tone: "Come-he has come to it! Answer, darling. Tell-tell how backward we found him!"

A lovely smile, so chaste in its frankness, lit up the young girl's face and without speaking she advanced toward Mme. Duchemin with extended hands. Then, kissing her: "I am so happy," she exclaimed

The very next day Frederick began his "wooing," as it is called. Yet what a strange thing! He, so outspoken till then-so open and so gaywas formal now, circumspect, stilted, almost unpleasant. Goodby to intimate "chatter," to all freedom! He chose his words carefully. No more jokes now!

At first Antoinette was disconcerted by it, but surmounting her painful impression she appeared happy enough for two. She was the first to speak of their plans, saying, as if inadvertently, "these dear plans.

He still called her "mademoiselle," while she called him "Frederick." She consulted him about the details of their future home. What shade did he prefer for the curtains? And when they were passing the glass works, stooping to kiss Martha, she prompted:

"Say 'Good morning, Aunt Fred." The attorneys had taken the matter in hand. Everything was ready, for the lieutenant had told his sister:

"Act for me. Have the settlements drawn to suit yourself." As for him, to all questions swered: "Yes. All right. As you please." So much so that at last Julia took him aside and said to him: "Take care, Fred. Take care lest you grieve this child." "Grieve her!" he repeated, startled.

"It would cause me the most bitter re "Yet one would think you do not love

"Not love her!" exclaimed the young man. "I would be the most ungrateful fellow. Oh, on the contrary, I love her with all the power of my soul, of my conscience and of my probity. Devoid of feeling as I may appear, my heart is all her own. I admire, and I adore her. Ah, why is she not poor? You would / see-you would see then, Julia," he added, relapsing into his darker mood. The eventful day was fixed. The bans were to be published. After dinner the lieutenant accompanied the ladies home, walking by their side along the road. At the door they bade one another goodby. After that word had been spoken Antoinette re-mained at Frederick's side, very close to him. She appeared to await something.

He understood. And once more low ring his eyes he saw the red ribbon lit by the last rays of the setting sun. And as in an hallucination in the rustling of the leaves he thought he heard again, "It would not be acting like a gentle-

Then, dazzled, he stepped back, and in a choking voice said: "Listen! My heart is bursting. Even if I unsettle everything, I must speak. I must tell you"-What? Everything! He stated everything indeed-the situations, his scruples, his great sorrow.

Antoinette and her mother sought to interrupt him, repeating,"But-but"-He did not listen. He went on to the end. And then only were they able to finish their sentence: "But-we know it!"

'What! You know that my sister and her husband are threatened with"-"Certainly, we know it," said the widow. "And this is why we hurried the conclusion, which will at last give us the right to ward off the misfortune they do not deserve."

"And you, Antoinette?" Somewhat confused, she replied: "I? Oh, I had but one fear-not to lease you!"-New York Commercial Advertiser.

Slope of Rivers. Generally speaking, the slope of rivers flowing into the Mississippi from the east is on an average about 3 inches per mile. Those entering it from the west have an average descent of about 6 inches per mile. The average descent per mile of the Missouri after it leaves the mountains is reckoned at about a foot; the Des Moines from its source to its conjunction with the Mississippi, 7.3 inches. The entire length of the Ohio shows a fall of even 5 inches. The Mississippi from the mouth of the Ohio to the gulf has a fall of but 21 inches.-Chicago

[CHICAG POOST.] Who is there in or around about Jonesville, Wis., that does not know Billy Smith, the lawyer? Billy added fresh laurels to those which already crowned him by some cute objection he filled in a case tried in that city. It was a very old case, and it excited much interest in the town. A farmer named Broughton, living near Jonesville, has a neighbor who owned a blooded bull, This bull broke into a field of Broughton's, and that farmer, in an attempt to drive him out, rather got the worst of it. The bull chased and the persued and persuer reached the fence the bull aided Mr. Broughton in scaling it. He took him on his horns and threw him bodily over it. Broughton warned the owner that he must keep the animal tied up or there would be

No attention, however, was paid to the warning, and only a few day after the first mishap the bull was found again in Broughton's fie'd. Calling to his help some of his men, Broughton got the bull into his barn, where injuries were ifficted upon it from which it died. The owner of the bull sued Broughton for the value of the beast and that gentleman retained Billy Smith as his counsel.

On the day of the trial the courtroom was packed, for it was hinted that Billy Smith had several bonmots he intended springing. I am sorry my informent's memory was so defective, for relating the story to me he could only call to mind one, but that one was important and had much to do with winning the case for his client. Billy's wit and humor on this occasion were exceptional even for him, and he hal the spectators and even the judge himself a greater parter part of the time.

Among others there was one witness for the prosecution, a farm-hand, who was endeavoring to make out that the bull only did his duty in chasing Mr. Broughton and tossing him out into the road. He tried to make out that the bull was more playful than ugly, and if Broughton had only acted properly he would not have been

"Why," said the witness, "it is true the bull did chase the defendant. He went after him and, 'Boo, boo, boo," and the witness endeavored to imitate the sound of a bull roaring mildly and not savagely.

Billy Smith was on his feet in an instant with an objection. "I object," he said turning to the judge, "to the admission to what the bull said as evidence.
